To evaluate the effects of visual deprivation on circulatory function and to determine whether the changes in the STI induced by the postural orthostatic test (POT) are related to a sympathetic discharge, we studied subjects with normal blood pressure who were submitted to two 10-minute orthostatic maneuvers. The maneuver consisted of a 0.22 g/cm² tilt to an 80 degrees head-up position during the first period and a postural tilt to the 60 degrees head-up position during the second period.
